

A Message from Rabbi Alter: Remembering in Love

In the Zichronot-Remembrances section of the Rosh HaShana service, we celebrate God's boundless memory:

You remember the creation of the world and You are mindful of Your creatures since the beginning of time.

What the Mahzor claims for God, the James Webb Space Telescope demonstrates for astronomy: The galaxies that Webb revealed are 4.6 billion years old. Future images will show us what the universe looked like between 13,550,000,000 and 13,700,000,000 years old. That's just 100 million years from to the Big Bang itself, mere inches from the curb in galactic distance.

'Before You stands revealed all that is hidden, and every mystery from the moment of creation.'

What's mind-bending about the Webb images is that they're of galaxies that don't look like that anymore, if they exist at all. They're now billions of years further along. We're seeing infrared light emitted long ago. The universe is that big; even at the speed of light, it takes a long time to traverse space.

The space telescope's value is unlike that of an MRI, or a Covid test – revealing what is hidden right now. The Webb matters because we cannot know the universe today without properly understanding its history – the universe of long, long ago.

On Rosh HaShana, we celebrate God's infinitely specific memory in the spirit of accountability. It's tied to the language of confession. As God precisely remembers our deeds, so should we take a full accounting of our actions. Pretense and denial are pointless; God knows our full story. The only real option is to admit to ourselves, and to God, who we are and the path we've followed, and so to chart a proper course for the year ahead.

But the Webb complicates our recollections on Rosh HaShana, and with it our path of T'shuva-Return.

'There are even passages here that suggest that God remembers us better than we really are...'

First of all, as the Webb's stunning images are actually ephemera – snapshots of a something fleeting, what are the recollections of our deeds in the year gone by? Does our past really define us today? So what? that I did or said x or y or z in the past? Does that past moment define the present me? Am I meaningfully accountable for it?

We know that the answer is Yes. Certainly, wrongs we've committed must be righted. They cannot simply be shrugged away with, "What's past is past." At the same time, it's important to recognize that while the past is behind us, it informs the present through a process of evolution. Often, the past can only be engaged through the prism – the wisdom and refinement – of the present.

But there's something else, too. Take a look at the

A Note from Hazzan Stein

I'm excited. Can I tell you why I'm excited? Because I love my job. And I love Milwaukee. And I love my community.

OK, all of that is true, but that's not why I'm excited. That's why I'm happy. But I am also excited. Can I tell you why I'm excited? I mean, really excited? I'm excited to welcome my good friend and Jewish musical colleague, Naomi Less, as our first ever weekend Artist-in-Residence September 9 through 11.

Who is Naomi Less? Good question. Naomi Less is an internationally celebrated Jewish songleader, singer/songwriter, and educator. Throughout the weekend, Naomi will lead us in energizing song and prayer, and inspiring learning, helping us along the path we are on as we develop into the spirited singing community we strive to be.

Sound ambitious? Well, it is. But trust me, Naomi is really good at this kind of thing. Actually, don't trust me. Come and see for yourself. It will not only be a joyous weekend together, it will serve as a launching point for a year full of great music and singing. I've seen her do it. Now it's our turn to be a part of it.

So, what can you do to help? Here are three things you can do to ensure an amazing event with positive ripple effects to follow.

1. First, show up. The more people present, the more people will be affected by the experience. And the more people present, the greater the effect will be for everyone there. This first part is, of course, open to everyone!

2. Second, spread the word. Mass emails from the synagogue are nice, but there's nothing like getting an individual or small group invitation from a friend. I'm looking for 10 people to agree to reach out to their peers and encourage them to come. Let me know if I can count on you for this.

3. Third, and most important, join my team. I'm looking for 5-7 people who will process the experience at the end of the weekend with me and Naomi and develop a plan to keep the momentum going. Our goal is not just to create an amazing weekend – which it will be – but to experience what amazing communal synagogue singing can be, and to make that what we aspire to achieve on a regular basis. Can I get 5 people to sign up for my team right now? We can do it, but not alone.

I love leading services. And I never tire of exploring new ways to engage people whether it's with new music, new prayer models (i.e., Shabbat in the Round, Camp-style Minyan, Family Services), or sharing new ways of understanding the prayers we sing. But it's a special treat to experience another master prayer leader at work, something I rarely get to do, and extra special when it means I get to share the experience with my community.

Have I mentioned I'm excited? I'm excited for Naomi Less to join us. I'm excited for her to share her music and perspectives. I'm excited for a wonderful weekend experience, and I'm excited for the potential the weekend has to move our congregation forward.

Have I mentioned I'm excited?

L'shalom,

Hazzan Stein

Rosh HaShana is one of my favorite holidays to customize. Just in case you missed it, here is my article printed in last September's Jewish Chronicle on how you can make the most out of celebrating the Jewish New Year!

Insights from Beata Abraham: An Instagram Worthy Rosh HaShana

Perhaps it is just a matter of aesthetics, but I wonder why in spite of the fact that Rosh HaShana is such an important day in the Jewish calendar (which many Jews spend in self-reflection, repentance, and immersed in ten straight days of 'awe'), neither Hallmark nor the retail world at large have co-opted this holiday in earnest. No light-up shofars, animated apples and honey, fish heads or Happy New Year banners to be found leading up to the big day. Of course, depending on where you live, you may come across a dusty box of matzah trotted out for display on the shelf of your local grocery store in a well-intentioned but out of context attempt to acknowledge Rosh HaShana, and also every other Jewish holiday.

As an antidote to feeling underrepresented, I encourage you to design your very own Instagram-worthy Rosh HaShana celebration, in a way that Martha Stewart can only aspire to achieve.

I have tried and tested a few ideas, keeping in mind that the only goal is to create joy and lasting memories. Martha will not be in actual attendance.

Apples and Honey Taste Test – apples and honey are not all created equal. This is the time of year when we all fall in love with honey again, so while this activity is nothing new, it is still worth repeating. To boost your honey game, procure as many types of honey as you can get your hands on (there are over 17, but this is not a reality cooking show so don't go crazy). Put out a variety of sliced apples to dip, add a voting method, and for a bit of extra flair: a blindfold. The honey with the most votes will receive the honor of the blessing for a sweet new year.

Rosh HaShana Craft Museum – Unearth those boxes filled with all of the glass and clay Rosh HaShana honey pots, hand-crafted Happy New Year cards, as well as the glued together apple-mobiles that the smaller humans in your life have ever made in or out of Religious School. Bonus if you can excavate your own childhood Rosh HaShana relics from days of yore. Pro tip: it is never too late to make some new Rosh HaShana crafts with children in your life. Cluster these items in a special mini-museum style display for all to enjoy. Heart strings will be tugged, guaranteed.

Birthday Party for the World – Rosh HaShana is not just a Jewish holiday. According to the Talmud, it is the birthday of humankind. Considering that the Universe is a pretty significant creation, a few cupcakes to commemorate this day hardly seem like too much effort. Whether you celebrate with a sphere-shaped cake frosted to look like planet Earth (I have actually done this), a candle on a single cupcake, or a Happy Birthday banner, let it spark a conversation about what each individual's part can be in making the world a better place; the ultimate birthday gift.

Rosh HaShana Tablescape – If you are thinking that the thought of coming up with, let alone setting, an elaborate table for RH feels beyond overwhelming, remember that you are going to want to eat at some point, so it might as well be at a striking and impactfully set table. An apple print tablecloth, a few carefully placed honey and/or bee-themed items, some laminated, handmade Happy New Year placemats, a small decorative tray or bowl with a mix of shiny real, plastic, or glass apples and pomegranates, a shofar or two as center pieces, can all go a long way. Use your imagination, but try not to google Rosh HaShana tablescaping, you will only scare

Zichronot-Remembrances section in the Mahzor (pp. 133-135): while it opens with a reflection on God's infinite and photographic memory, the verses it brings to extend the theme tell a different story. Every instance of God's memory cited here tells of memory as action.

In Biblical language, lizkor-to remember is not about recalling something that's fading into the past but is rather about being moved by another's need. It's about acting out of relationship. Think of the expression, "She remembered my birthday." We're not talking about an internal event. We're talking about an action.

God's boundless memory is about God acting out of love. God reaching out to those, like Noah adrift on the waters of a flooded world, or our ancestors mired in Egyptian slavery, who would be lost but for God remembering. There are even passages here that suggest that God remembers us better than we really are: a nostalgia that's rosier than the reality ever was. This, rather than the past as seen under harsh light of an unforgiving auditor, is what we mean when we talk about God's memory on Rosh HaShana.

As God remembers in love, so must we. We must look back on our own past year in love, confident that God will do the same. Accountability in this context is about rescue, not some terrifying punishment.

And what of the Webb's peculiar memory of a beautiful, early universe that is no more, yet is our very own universe? May its images help us perceive the beauty of the universe today. Help us intuit that what we cannot see from up close in today's world (and in our own souls) is no less beautiful, and that it (like our own souls) is in a constant process of change.

May 5783 be for us all a year of deep beauty and blessed change.

Rosh HaShana Reflection Cards – Of course there also needs to be a thought-provoking component to this holiday celebration. Rosh HaShana is a mini workout for the soul, so you should probably break an existential sweat by self-reflecting, soul searching, and resolution making. But like any good workout, it will transform, strengthen, and fortify you for navigating your daily life in the year to come.

Place on your table a stack of Rosh HaShana Reflection cards, for your family or friends to select from and answer aloud. What you write on the cards is up to you. It might be questions like: What were your biggest mistakes over the last year? Greatest achievements? What brought you the most joy? Which moments felt deeply meaningful? What have you resolved to do differently next year? Or it might be questions that you came up with yourself that only you and your participants will understand. Just make sure that each question can be answered by a responder of any age, and keep in mind that Rosh HaShana is not just about looking backwards but is an opportunity to look forward as well.

Unfortunately, none of these ideas will guarantee that you will be written in the Book of Life, but then again, they can't hurt either. And it is always comforting to know that you pulled off an amazing and memorable celebration of one of the biggest holidays in the Jewish calendar, just in case...

Sisterhood Update

Sisterhood is looking forward to starting the New Year with exciting programming. We are welcoming back experienced board members and new board members as well who are interested in continuing Sisterhood's fine tradition of helping CBINT in many ways. We would like to welcome back our previous Co-President, Barbara Tenin, and introduce our new Co-President, Armona Nadler-Strick.

Barbara Tenin grew up in Glendale and attended Nicolet High School before going to UW-Madison. When she moved back to Milwaukee, she settled back in Glendale with her husband, Brad, and their two children, Elliot and Josie. Barbara currently works for Milwaukee Public Schools as a Special Education Supervisor. She is excited to continue her work with Sisterhood as a Co-President.

Armona Nadler-Strick is a native of Chicago. She received her bachelor's degree and her master's degree from Indiana University, Bloomington. She earned her Doctorate in Audiology from Central Michigan University. Returning to Chicago, Armona had the good fortune of meeting and marrying Greg Strick from Glendale. Armona and Greg live in Fox Point with their two daughters, Shira and Sarina. She works for HEAR Wisconsin in West Allis as an audiologist. Active in Sisterhood in the past, Armona is excited to have been recruited and serves this year as a Co-President with Barbara.

Details are forthcoming for our upcoming General Board Meeting. We are very excited for the return of our Vendor Fair on Sunday, October 23. This year's Vendor Fair promises to be bigger and better as we celebrate being together for this event once again.

Are you looking to get involved with a great group of women? Are you bursting with ideas for CBINT and don't know who to share them with? We are always interested in having new members join us and also have a few open board positions. Sisterhood welcomes your input and commitment to CBINT. Please join us! Wishing everyone a happy, healthy, and sweet New Year!

SAC News and A 'Get to Know''

The Social Action Committee (SAC) would like to recognize – and thank – members Marla and Steve Frydman for their outstanding volunteerism at CBINT! Here's a bit about them.

Marla and Steve were married at CBINT 50 years ago and have been members since returning to Milwaukee in 1974. They have been part of a temple havura that meets monthly and has been together since the early 1970s. The havura has helped the Men's Club with the Purim carnival by manning the booths and even building some of the games that are used. Marla enjoys knitting for charity with the temple group and volunteers whenever she can with the bakers. For the past four years, Marla and Steve have been delivering Meals-on-Wheels once a month. Steve tries to help with making a minyan virtually and in person whenever possible. They are just two "regular" temple members enjoying their relationship with the CBINT community.

SAC also welcomes three new members to its ranks: Sarie Shainock, Bobbie Fishman, and Bobbie Fishbein. We look forward to the contributions each will make to our committee's work.

The wonderful vegetable garden – thanks to the diligence and caring input of our Green Team members Karen Rachum and Dr. Amanda Stein – has been providing a bountiful output as of July! Most of the produce is being provided to Tikkun Ha'Ir and the Jewish Community Pantry.

With the High Holy days just around the corner, more information will be shared through our next update and the CBINT e-news regarding the Jewish Community Pantry's needs. New this year is the request to provide books for children who accompany their family to the pantry. This initiative is being coordinated for and in loving memory of our SAC member, Marsha Denny, of blessed memory.

As always – thank you for your contributions to the SAC.

L' Shana Tova!

CBINT Kehillah Catering Kitchen Has Reopened!

Whether you wish to celebrate or commemorate a birthday, anniversary, simcha, or yahrzeit, let us assist you and your guests. We will create a menu and provide value that meets your expectations. Additionally, you can support our CBINT kitchen through sponsorships of Shabbat and holiday kiddushim (full or partial), minyan meals, purchase of equipment on our "wish list," and donations to the Merry Atinsky Kiddush Fund. Please consider us for your next simcha.
